

Wedding Proposal Ideas: Why You Must Stick To The K.I.S.S. Principle In Creating A Unique Proposal

By, Lucy Doyle

It isn't easy to prepare a great wedding proposal. There's a lot of pressure on you, and it seems like every romantic proposal idea has already been done before at least once if not more times. This leads many men (and women) who are looking for wedding proposal ideas to either go overboard in what they're planning or to spend a large sum of money on their proposal in the hopes that the expenditure will cover up the fact that their proposal lack in creativity.

The fact is, that the best proposal ideas aren't expensive or extravagant. I know of many great and creative marriage proposal ideas which cost under 50$ yet they were so unique that they blew the mind of the women (or men) who received them.

If you want to create the perfect marriage or engagement proposal, you need to follow the K.I.S.S. principle. K.I.S.S. equals Keep It Simple Stupid. Your proposal needs to be simple and to the point. Creating an extravagant proposal will make it less personal, and this is all about the personal connection and love between you and your partner.

Women dream of big weddings with a lot of guests, catering, and music, but a proposal needs to be all about you two. The proposal needs to be adapted to the kind of person your partner is, the things she or he likes, the memories you share together. That's why creating the perfect wedding proposal idea is something that only you can do. It helps if you have some ideas to inspire you, but in the end, you need to put your creative cap on and to make something of your own.

About the Author

To read more on how to create the perfect marriage proposal, click here: Creative Marriage Proposal Ideas. Lucy Doyle writes on how to propose in a way that your love will never forget on this webpage: How To Propose In A Way That Will Blow Her \(or him\) Away.

Source: <http://selectengagementring.com>